

When touring the NS Toyoto yard in Georgetown Kentucky at the 2015 Regional, I found a very fragile load located on a container chassis. A fellow touree willingly let me shoot the photo with him looking in on the load for perspective. The load is a bird's nest, fully lined with feathers and containing eggs. Not a standard load by any means but still my favorite-of-all-time load picture.

Note the construction of the load, incorporating the car wiring to provide stability. Hope the birds hatched before the car was used with a conventional load.

Hey, it isn't a flat car but it is open and it has a load. ;-D
